Annie's mother is a large and very pleasant woman, and the flat a little dream of coziness and comfort. Annie herself is a very attractive girl of seventeen, who dresses and bears herself as if much older.

She made the unhappy acquaintance of Applegate through that dangerous pastime, filtring. She noticed him from her window and he spoke to her the first time she appeared in the street. His confident manner completely deceived Annie and her mother. He mar-

Applegate says that a few nights ago a lawyer and a party of men, including "Chinry" McGuire, Mike Ryan and Ed Parmelly, had come to his refuge in Hoboken and asked him to sign a statement alleged to have been made to his wife, acknowledging that his testimony before the Lexow Committee was false. This he refused to do.

He says, nowever, that he took 100 from a nameless man last Monday as the price of his refusing to testify against Capt. Meakim.

Capt. Price says that Applegate's stories are all villianous lies, and that the green-goods man would long ago have been arrested for a felony were it not for the police promises to the Lexow Committee.

Capt. Meakim, who is off on sick leave, could not be found.
